ALPHA ZETA VALPOLICELLA

Val's a gamer on a budget - bigger all around, but not flabby.

conceptual doppelgänger

The Moto Guzzi V7 in cherry red! What a beautiful bike from Italy's glorious 70s - when Moto Guzzis were the bike for the rider who craved sexy but needed reliability with a candy finish. These bikes are legend in Italy and still made to this day, just updated technically, much like our Valpolicella: a classic Italian varietal modernized to run with today's wine drinker who likes their thrills with regularity.

Producer Alpha Zeta was conceived in 1999 by David Gleave, MW. Working with star New Zealand winemaker, Matt Thomson, David set out to work intently with small, family-owned growers, not large enough to set up their own estates. This is in contrast to standard practice for the region, which is to buy bulk wine. The result is access to super high quality fruit, the most important ingredient for a super high quality wine, at extremely reasonable prices. Why the name? Because the wines cover a range of styles and varieties that exist in the area, from a dry, white Soave, to lively, young, Valpolicella, all the way through to a rich, brooding Amarone.

Viti/Vini Sustainable. Hand harvested. The grapes were destemmed, crushed and pumped into stainless steel tanks. The must was left in contact with the skins for 7 days and fermentation took place at up to 30 degrees Celsius. Malolactic fermentation took place in stainless steel tank.
